

About the TOEFL iBT

The Test of English as a Foreign Language Internet-Based Test (TOEFL iBT) measures the ability of non-native speakers of English to use and understand North American English as it is employed in college and university settings. Scores on the test are required by most colleges and universities, professional schools, and some sponsoring institutions and professional organizations in the United States. Scores are valid for two years and available through the Education Testing Services website approximately 15 business days after test day (www.ets.org/toefl). The TOEFL iBT takes about four hours to complete, and is administered on computer at pre-selected testing sites.

The TOEFL iBT is divided into four sections, which always appear in the following order: Reading, Listening, Speaking, and Writing. Note taking is allowed during all sections of the test and may be used when answering questions. There is an optional ten-minute break between the Listening and Speaking sections on the test. The TOEFL iBT is administered only on computer, and unlike previous versions of the test, the TOEFL iBT includes a Speaking Section and expanded Writing Section with integrated tasks that require the test taker to use more than one language skill. Your combined performance on all four sections results in a single scaled score ranging from 0-120 points. You will also receive separate subscores for each section ranging from 0-30 points.
